SOCIETY

"Who is the real good?"

I asked in passing now.

"Order," said the Law Court.

Knowledge, said the School.

Youth, said the Studio.

Pleasure, after the Feed.

Fun, said the Wise Man.

Beauty, said the Muse.

Love, said the Maiden.

Kindness, the Steel.

But, grace my heart full souls.

The answer is not here.

Then within me, beyond.

Softly this I feel—

You ask the greatest word—

Kindness is the word.

On this word is built the upper structure of society. Society that bears the brunt of ridicule from the discredited, excluded class, society that is caricatured by art, and written the world over, yet whose unwritten, inexorable laws demand man's humanity to man and have lifted man and from the degradation of vice, to the heights of sympathetic aspiration for all the noble aspirations of the soul.

Know-on says that "Society demands in its paragon class the element of good nature, expressing all degrees of generosity from the low enthusiasm to ridges up to the heights of a magnanimity and love." And crystallized to the spinal element, society—the conventions governing the coming together of humankind, sisterhood.

The highest cause must acknowledge the worthiness of the most dedicated for social service.

To be a gentleman it is no sufficient to have a grandeur. Blood will degenerate.

To be a gentleman does not depend on the latter or indeed, if on those and "gentlemen's ushers" and ladies would lead society.

A gentleman is one combining a woman's tenderness with a man's courage. His nature is fashioned all the highest models. And without that pearl of great price, tenderness, who can be claim to gentleness or be rated in polite society?

Yet, having that intrinsic quality who can be disqualified from exclusive society or fall in ears with them through life the perfume of the tenderness that is stored away in the heart the rose leaves in a drawer to sweeten all the days about him.

As surely as Chesterton's nineties in the company of womankind, just so surely with winning hearts captivated to his charms, she is commanding, charming. A man may be ill-treated, insulted, poor in earthly goods, but when he has the wealth of cultured breeding and reverence for women he possesses the ideal destined for every woman married or single and with his hand to become part of the cream in the social milk pithces.

Perhaps disillusioned wedded women are more appreciative of Chesters' words than their unprepared sisters. Not that they may be wed and wed again, but as a gratification to the yearning for life expression may come regard, when the post-bonny moon in dead often deems too often to perish.

Mr. Fowler says that "every woman is beautiful who has a chivalrous husband—if she be the goddess of beauty."

Has the bloom faded from the cheeks of the maidens lived while she lost the captivating sweethearts of youth?

Then it became some of the beautified things have gone out of her life. When times are as tender and only as common as in the days of courtly, the fugitive roses will bloom again in the garden of her fair and radiant beauty, reflecting a lass her devotion will again glorify her as in "the olden time."

True it benefits. And bachelors who would bask in the light of beauty—strive to inspire it by nourishing the flower of knightliness with "the milk of human kindness."

After spasmodic efforts to restore the spell of midsummer monotony society has at last surrendered unconditionally, and still "enamor" has settled like a pall on the season where end the gay and radiant shout resounding in the halls of revelry where thronged the bright and joyous.

The social season of merriment and early summer has passed into the viewless air.

“and silence now
is brooding like a gentle spirit o'er the still and pale-faced world.”

The occasional visits of nobles and social leaders from other cities stimulus goes and leaves only one dance during July.

Masonic Club Meets.

The Masonic Club, organized late in the spring for the purpose of advancing sociability among Masons, is making heroic efforts to fulfill its purpose. As a committee meeting last Monday evening in the temple, different plans were adopted to open and furnish buildings, clubs rooms in the temple, where Masons may congregate all day and while away the hours reading, playing games and greeting each other. It was decided to possess the name of the Lodge or Committee or probably the Lodge

Frances, Masons, Julia Kolker, Sue Maher, May Maher.
